This course will introduce students to the history of video art and its emergence in Latin America. Readings will be drawn from a variety of sources. Students will have the unique opportunity to see work never screened in the United States. As part of the course, students will curate a one-day video screening which will be open to the public. No prior art history coursework required.